

Exercise Five – The First Plot Point

This major scene is the first turning point in your story. It marks the end of the First Act and the beginning of the Second. Answer the following questions to help you:

leave the Normal World and irreversibly engage with the main conflict?
In what way might this event be surprising even after the Inciting Event?

Which of the following best describes your First Plot Point?

A seemingly positive opportunity
Something disastrous
It destroys the Normal World, leaving the protagonist no choice but to move on

It physically removes the protagonist from the Normal World
It warps the Normal World, forcing the protagonist to adapt to new ways of surviving within it

What decision on your character's part led him right up to the First Plot
Point, making her at least partially responsible for what happens?
Which best describes your protagonist's reaction to the First Plot Point?
Enthusiasm – she wants to enter the conflict of the Second Act
Resistance – she must be forced to enter the conflict of the Second A Resistance – she must be forced to enter the connict of the Second A
Harris III alia Pina Bia Baira fanora na aliana dan tanan ing manakan alian al
How will the First Plot Point force your character into a reaction that direct pits her Truth against the world's Lie?
What definitive action will she take to move forward into the Adventure
World of the main conflict?
The total of the second of the

Which will the character be trying to do?

Restore the old normal of a Truth-based Normal World

How?
Find a new normal by destroying the Lie-based Normal World
How?
Name three new physical needs that must be met in the aftermath of the First Plot Point?
What definitive new plot goal will the character now adopt (something quantifiable, based on maintaining or reclaiming the Truth)?
The state of the s

Do you want the character to ultimately achieve this goal?

Yes
Why?
No
Why?			